An amazing swimmer

Martin Strel was born in October 1954, in Slovenia. He is a famous marathon swimmer and has broken world records for swimming the world's longest rivers, including the Danube, the longest river in Europe, the Mississippi, the longest river in North America, the Yangtze, the longest river in Asia, and the Amazon, which many people believe is the longest river in the world. When Strel swims these rivers, he only sleeps for five hours each night. He also prepares for each swim for more than a year and it takes him half a year to recover after each one.

In 2000, Strel swam the entire length of the River Danube, from Germany to Romania, a distance of 2,860 kilometres. In July 2001, he broke the world record for non-stop swimming. He swam an amazing 504 km in just 84 hours. In 2002, he swam the Mississippi, a distance of 3,885 km. He completed this swim in just 68 days. Then, in 2007, Strel began his most difficult and most dangerous journey: the Amazon, a river full of snakes, fish and dangerous currents. He swam the river from its source on the border between Colombia and Brazil to its mouth at the Atlantic Ocean, a distance of 5,268 kilometres. The swim took 66 days and Strel was completely exhausted when he finished this swim on the eastern coast of Brazil.

And his next swim? Strel says that he is not planning to swim the River Nile in Africa because it is too easy!
