Unusual friends

The Tom and Jerry cartoon series has fans all over the world. Although both the plot and humour are really simple (the cat tries to catch the mouse, but always loses in the end), Tom and Jerry has made both children and adults laugh for more than 70 years now.

The history of Tom and Jerry started in 1940 when the cartoon, which was called Puss Gets the Boot at that time, appeared in cinemas. Two American cartoonists, William Hanna and Joseph Barbera, created it for MGM studios. Joseph Barbera wrote the story and designed the characters while William Hanna was the producer. The two men met in 1937 in Los Angeles, California, when they were working at the same film studio. After an MGM cartoon based on a comic called Captain and the Kids was a total disaster, the studio asked Hanna and Barbera to start working together on a new animated film. At first, when Joseph Barbera came up with the idea of a cat-and-mouse story, William Hanna and other MGM employees were not very enthusiastic about it, but decided to produce it anyway. Moreover, the pessimism disappeared when the cinema audiences loved the cartoon. However, the first cartoon was not successful enough to win the Academy Award for the Best Animated Film, which went to another MGM cartoon called The Milky Way. So, Hanna and Barbera organized a competition for a new title. An animator called John Carr came up with the idea of calling the cartoon Tom and Jerry. From then on, William Hanna and Joseph Barbera worked only on this cartoon for the MGM cartoon studio until 1957, when the animation studio closed down. That same year, Hanna and Barbera left MGM and opened their own TV studio, called Hanna-Barbera Productions. They started producing a lot of different TV shows and films. Their most famous productions include The Flintstones, Yogi Bear, Scooby-Doo and The Smurfs.

In total, more than 160 episodes of Tom and Jerry were made, with Hanna and Barbera making 130 of them. In 1965, Tom and Jerry was shown on television for the first time and, in 1992, a full-length film was made, called Tom and Jerry: The Movie. Finally, Tom and Jerry won seven Oscars for the best short cartoon between 1943 and 1952.
